PROBABLE YIELD OF THE ENGLISH WHEAT CROP.

Seldom have such differences of opinion as to the probable yield of the wheat crop been en-Seidom have such differences of opinion as tertained as prevail in reference to this year's crop. And this arises from the peculiarities of the season. A mild winter following a favorable seed-time produced in most districts, and on almost all kinds of land, a full plant of wheat which has resulted in a bulky yield of straw on all except the lightest soils. Then came a long period of barsh and dry easterly winds in March and April, during which the plant on the I ghter lands and in exposed situations scarcely maintained itself, and there was some complaint of deficiency. But on the stronger soils, especially where such soils were in good condition, the check afforded by a cold spring was rather beneficial to the wheat plant than otherwise, and prevented the undue luxuriance at one time apprehended. Then followed considerable fails of rain, though with cold nights in May, which completely established the plant and induced very general anticipations of a large wheat had for a fortnight or more such heat as none recollect any previous instance in this country for the last forty years. This was the critical point. The wheat shot into ear with extraordinary rapidity. Many a farmer who had been absent from his farm for a lew days found wheat fields, which he had left without any ear of corn visible, with all the care o mpletely developed, and every promise of a Water. 8.55

Then the most glowing accounts of the crop were given on though here and there a corresponpated doubts whether the color of vas quite satisfactory, and whether ure ripening was not to be apprehen ded. This was succeeded by heavy thunderstorms, rain, and wind, which laid immense breadths of wheat everywhere, which occurred just be a charvest and tended much to the abatement of previous high hopes. Then the barvest came on from ten days to a fortnight earlier than in average seasons, and, upon the whole, has been well got in, though tew weeks during its progress bave passed without some rain. The rain, however, has been re-had it in turn. The yield of the new wheat is very variable, especially that of white wheat, which does not seem able to withstand rapid and extreme variations of temperature so well as red. in Mark lane weigh as low as 47 or 48 lbs. per bushel, while others range as high as 65 Water. 1.70 ibs. per bushel. The red wheat is more equal, but still showing great variations in the samples. Some of the interiority of the worst samples is atributable to the straw having been laid, and in many places it was laid early in the season; the produce being fit for little except poultry feeding. On the strong and well-conditioned lands the produce is everywhere the best, and it will be from such lands the wheat crop of this year will be brought up to an average, if it still be found to have reached that point.

This is the question on which so much difference of opinion exists. All farmers admit that the sheaves are light, but many point to the larger quantity of straw grown, and contend that from so much more, an average yield of wheat will be obtained. The State of the marketeshow that such is at pre-ent the prevalent opinion. Compared with the great wheat crop of last year, we shall certainly find our yield deficient, but whether it SUPER PHOSPHATE OF LIME, will be above or below the average-if any MANUFACTURED BY POTTS & KLETT, and son's one knows what that is-it is more than usually deficult to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. The best farmers, comparing Farming community. their wheat of this year with that of last, cannot fail to be struck with the difference between them, and with their large dependence upon the season for success or failure. London Economist.

SEASONABLE FOR THE LADIES.

During the Fail season the regulators of fashion, filled with Parisian taste and New York extravagance, say that the hats will be so various and grotesque, the skirts so voluminous, the trimmings and furbelows so profuse, that the eye is now more often offended than gratified by the productions of new notioned millicers and mantuamakes.

For September boppets our milliners are preparing Beigian straws, trimmed with a bow of the same straw, mixed with wheat ears and poppies placed at the side, and ponceau ribbon across the forehead, ending on one side in a Pompadour resette, and on the other in a small bunch of wheat cars and puppies. Black bows of taffets or velvet trim the botnets; sometimes the taffeta is placed as a scarf across the bonnet, and edged with lace.

The srings and flowers should be of bright colors. Leghorn for the autumn is generally decorated with rich dark fancy ribbon, with autumn fruits. For the cool morning and evenings, the light clear burnous is worn; we see them of brown gray, striped black and white Scotch plaid, and crossed barred flannel. The hood has a tasel. All robes of pique are made with a cass ck of the same, thus obviating the necessity of an additional trapping for the street. The black silk butpous, triumed with a wide ruche of the same silk, is a very fashionable garment; it effectually conceals the dress and is, therefore, useful to wear over a mourning peignoise Flowers and velvet bows are the evening conflures; the flowers are principally arranged in wreaths, sometimes full, but generally fuller behind than in front. The flowers most used, are wild roses, daises of various colors, white and red ozaleas, isy, or bollybeck, acacia, and water-hiles.
